MINERS GOING BACK TO WORK AT IDAHO MARYLAND

THINKING OUT LOUD

By H. M. L.

This time our topic is completely innocuous. There will be no repercussions, no back talk. It's about trees and shrubs that we know, some of wich shade the writer's lawn and garden. Our favorite is a larch.

It was purchased years ago. The nurseryman who grew it, dug it out of a row of young larches. Jackrabbitts had eaten of the young trees all around the base and as high as their winter appetites could reach. It was not prepossessing to look at, but the nurseryman made a discount for rabbit damage, and we planted it at the corner of the lot. It grew fast and straight and is now 40 feet tall, perhaps taller. Just as the nurseryman said, it now shows no rabbitt harassement.

The larch is the only one of the conifers that is deciduous. It sheds its needles in the late Fall, and puts forth with them again in the early Spring. We used to think larches grew nowhere but in Scandinavia. We have had to correct that error, for there are forests of them in Idaho. Their habit, so to speak, is columnular. They shoot their column right up into the blue. The branches extend out horizontally on either side in even lengths and from them droop the feathery plumes of foliation, one might almost call it a tree of weeping habit. This tree shuts off the street light, from the house, gives a dense shade across the lawn, and in the winter time is gracefully barren, letting through the sunlight abundantly.

Then there is a red bud we bought in a can from a Lake County nurseryman a good many years ago, and always regretted that we did not buy one of the Nevada County species with their gorgeous red purple blooms that cover the branches before the leaves appear. This Lake County tree, for it is a tree now, is covered sparsely with pale pink blooms.

Then there is the Japanese magnolia that grows terrifically well in this climate and soil, and puts out a great many of big purple and white flowers before even a shred of foliage appears. At a little distance the tree looks as if a flock of handsome birds had settled no its bare branches. We have no prejudices about Japanese plants, prints or pottery. We are glad the little brown fellows we so recently licked were able in years agone to propagate so many beautiful species of shrubs, trees, and plants. The Emperor's royal emblem is the Chrysanthemum, and we hope, he and his people stick to it from now on.

Another magnolia of which we are especially fond is the star variety which puts out its ragged white blooms in the Spring before the leaves show. There is something very gay and vagabondish about the star magnolia. Its long white petals are very supple and they wave waggishly in every breeze. The trouble is that this magnolia blooms so early that it often catches the late rains.

Our Maple tree planted above the patio was purchased with the assurance its leaves would turn scarlet in the fall. Well, it never did, not even to this day when it is a well grown tree. In the Fall the leaves are but slightly pinkish and then they suddenly turn brown and drop off. However, some bird planted a seed of one of the native maples near this hybrid phony, and presently we shall have both shade and in the Fall that splendid red canopy that one rides through for some miles on the road to Lake Tahoe during Autumn.

A tree that was old when we moved in, is a huge locust and what a shedder of debris that tree is. In the Spring when it first leafs out and puts out a panoply of blooms in bunched plumes, it does give one a bit of quiet excitement, but later on when it begins to shed things it proves itself a hard taskmaster, selling its Spring beauty at an enormus price in human sweat when it sheds its blossoms, which fill every crevace in the patio. Then it sheds its last season's seed pods and are those seeds virile? They will sprout in a speck of dust. Then it sheds its leaves and between times its bark. It's a good tree for a couple of weeks in the Spring, but most of the year it's shedding things, a sort of strip teaser, that one must constantly follow around and pick up after.

HIGH WINDS DRY FOREST COVER AFTER RAIN

The usual Memorial Day storm brought to the Truckee District of the Tahoe National Forest a total precipitation, according to William of forty-one hundreths inches of F. Curran, Fire Control Assistant, at Truckee.

Total pecipitation for May was nineteen hundredths inches, being sixty-two hundredths unde normal for that month but bringing the total for the season to one and sixty-two hundredths inches above normal. With temperatures dropping to the near freezing point, the storm left a light blanket of snow on the higher ridges.

Although the storm gave tempoary relief to the forest over the three day holiday, with no fires reported in the Trckee District, high winds are again drying the forest cover. Additional fire fighters are now being employed to combat the expected heavy fire hazard that will exist during the coming summer months.

CITY COUNCIL OF GRASS VALLEY HEARS TAXPAYERS

GRASS VALLEY: Members of the Grass Valley Council gathered last Tuesday evening at the local city hall for an adjourned meeting which was attended by a large delegation from the Grass Valley Taxpayers Association in addition to other civic minded citizens.

The meeting was purposely called so that the members of the taxpayers group could be heard in regards to the numerous questions pertaining to reassessments of city real estate and the viewpoint of the council in regard to a five man council instead of the present three man council.

Jim Moore who headed the delegation for the taxpayers group group opened the discussion with a frank statement — announcing that the group he represented was dissatisfied with the high assesments recently levied by the city assessor—pointing out the inceased amount of property and dwelling assessments over previous years.

Immediately following Moore, Mayor Alison Simmons gave the group a thorough briefing why the increased assessments were made—pointing out that when the rates are levied they will still be low in comparison to other California communities. Simmons also brought forth the point that public works of the city for the last two years has been kept to maintenance and the assesment. Surveys are being made to determine who was and who wasn't paying taxes to the city.

Pointing out that each taxpayer can have his individual assessment considered at the 1948 meeting of the city council sitting at the Grass Valley Board of Equalization. The group thanked the council.

Following the taxpayes delegation, reports were heard from Dan Stewart, Frank Knuckey and Charles Halstead.

GRASS VALLEY: All told about 170 of the 400 employees of the Idaho Maryland Mines Corporation went back to work yesteday morning in the two mines operated by the company, the New Brunswick and the Idaho. There was no violence. Processions of cars of miners drove past picket lines at both gates.

At the meeting of he Mine Mill and Smelter Workers., CIO, Wednesday evening, William Gately, organizer, formerly stationed here, but who had flown west from Connecticutt to be present, told the members that the Mine Workers Protective League, a local independent union, which holds the bargaining agency contract with the Idaho Maryland, was in the eyes of the National Labor Relations Board an illegal union. The members decided to augment their picket lines, and make it an all day vigil, instead of the hours when a change of shift takes place at the mines.

At a meeting Wednesday night of the Mine Workers Protective League, attended by 125 members, Ed Jones, secretary, reported that it was voted unanimously to return to work this morning. Crofford Bridges, attorney for the league told the members that on August 20, last year, at a hearing by the Labor Relations Board in the Veterans Memorial Building, Gately representing the Mine Mill and Smelter Workers, had stipulated with the attorney for the Idaho Maryland, that the league was an independent legal union. Bridges read this item from the record.

W. B. Tankersley, president of the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers Union, yesterday said that if necessary the CIO would picket the mines for 10 years. He declared that Grass Valley was the "scabliest town" he had ever lived in.

Ed Jones, secretary of the league, said he believed that by tomorrow most of the men employed before the work stoppage would be back at work. He said it required a little time fo the word to get around that the mine was open.

Neal O'Donnell, vice president and general manager of the Idaho Maryland, expressed his gratification that the work stoppage was over, and estimated that almost 50 percent of the working force was back on the job.

Trouble started Thursday, last week, when 20 employees were summarily discharged. All but one or two of those dismissed were members of the Mine Mill and Smelter Workers. The union immediately declared its members were locked out and established picket lines. The management declared it was a jurisdictional strike or a walkout. The Mine Workers Protective League called it a work stoppage.
